great introduction to art and artists through history

By Isabelle L.

We are currently in the midst of a unit on art with our homeschool coop. The kids had spend the past two weeks learning about the lingo of art and creating fun things. Last week, I was teaching about self-portrait and we learned about Albrecht Dürer who is considered the first artist to make a self-portrait. He actually made four of them while growing up and his first one was at the age of 13 years. Needless to say, I was very please to have the book ART a visual history to show the page on this artist to the kids.

The table of content is divided in different era:

Early Art c. 30,000BCE – 1300CE

Gothic and Early Renaissance C1300 – 1500

High Renaissance and Mannerism C1500 – 1600

The Baroque Era C1600 - 1700

From Rococo to Neoclassicism C1700 - 1800

Romantic and Academic Art C1800 - 1900

Modernism C 1900 – 1970

Contemporary Art 1970 onward

In each of these sections gives techniques used during a specific era and will provide a timeline of the history as well. You will be able to discover the artists who created art during that period of time and learn more about the media they used. The book is packed with information on artist, samples of sculptures and paintings, information about specific historical influence, as well as a glossary.

This book is very informative and will introduce anyone reading it to art during history. However, if you have children at home – particularly growing boys near puberty age – I think that you should be aware that this book could be a source of issues when it comes to the unveiling of the body of women.

This has some great art history content but it is also very biased towards Western art... It would be nice if the perspective was a little more rounded. But as advertised it is a fine package.
